Justice of the Peace Francis Cropper testified to overhearing a quarrel between William Churchman, a neighbor of Kendall's, with Thomas Kendall, the son, in which Churchman threatened young Kendall with a revolver. According to the justice of the peace the Kendalls appealed to him on one occasion for protection against the Japanese. The inquest will be resumed tomorrow. Besides the bloodstained axe, the bed clothes, hammer and torso of the woman, which formed a ghastly exhibit, Lee and Smith today found several other bones in the creek near the house, which are believed to be from the skulls of the Kendall family.
